CONCLUSION:

The impacts of social media are intricate and vary individually. Our data indicates that many individuals either experience or observe negative effects. Despite our ongoing research, we have yet to identify direct and clear determinants. We anticipate that with more time and extensive research, we can draw clearer conclusions. Feel free to explore our research report on the impact of social media on teenagers to contribute more data and support our ongoing research. Another intriguing aspect to explore is whether participants would consider reducing their social media usage.

While interviewees expressed a desire to decrease their social media and phone usage, we neglected to inquire if they would take action. Considering both positive and negative effects, it would be insightful to understand the inclination of our generation to reduce social media usage. Delving into phone addiction, exploring why people use specific apps and their emotional responses could provide valuable insights. Questions like "How does using Snapchat make you feel on a scale of 1-10?" might uncover information contributing to our understanding of social media addiction.

Given the complexity and novelty of this topic, there is a vast array of ideas to explore. If you have additional research questions or insights, please share them with us, or feel free to continue your exploration of this topic.
